

This script takes a little more liberty in length and added Dudeist sentiment.

Officiant: Dudely beloved, we have gathered here today to tangle the threads of (first party) and (second party) as they begin to weave the rug of marriage that will tie their lives together.

Optional reading or statement by the officiant or member of the wedding party.

The officiant addresses the first party.

Officiant: Dude, do you take (Second party) to be your lawfully wedded (wife/husband)? To be your special (lady/gentleman) friend, to hold in abiding matrimony, and not treat each other like objects? If so, please answer I do.

After the (first party) declares their intent.

Officiant: Far out!

Officiant addresses the second party.

Officiant: Dude, do you take (first party) to be your lawfully wedded (wife/husband)? To be your special (lady/gentleman) friend, to hold in abiding matrimony, and not treat each other like objects? If so, please answer I do.

Officiant: Far out!

After both parties have formally declared their intent to marry, the officiant solemnizes the marriage.

Officiant: By the authority vested in me by The Church of Latter-Day Dude, a stranger, and the state of (state where the wedding is taking place), I now pronounce you (Husband/Wife) and (Husband/Wife). Dude and Dude, you may now seal it with a kiss, or what have you. Let there be much cheer on this groovy day! Bar's over there.